lis and Anderson were fighting, and Anderson had a small piece of the sand bag left. Tullis had get hold of the end of it and burst it, but Anderson jerked it out of his hand and beat him over the head with it. While he was doing this, Anderson said the first thing he knew he saw the motion of a pistol, and Dick fired at Tullis and missed him. He was then close to Tullis. Tullis whirled around, and Dick said to Anderson, "Stand back," and he did so, and Dick shot Tullis in the back; then he ran up to him and putting the pistol to the back of Tullis's head fired main. At that time Tullis had fallen on his face, By this time Anderson had run, and Dick followed him to the boat. Dick shot three times, and Dick said he shot him through the throat the first time, and that did not seem to phase him, and then he shot him in the back and he fell on his face, and then he put his pistol to his head and gave him the other shot and ran. They got in the boat and pulled down the river about two miles, and, cressing over to the Sacramento side, tied the boat up and broke the oars in two and threw them into the river. They then took the basket with the grub that was left and set it in the brush near the edge of the road.

They then, went back in the tules, they said. lis and Anderson were fighting, and Anderson had a small piece of the sand bag left. Tullis had

FROM. How the Turkish Government Robbed the Prince de Lusignas—And How the Prince Desires to Recover his Rights.

From the London Times, PARIS, Aug. 10 .- All who were at Berlin during the Congress will have remarked a gentleman who excited attention in all the diplomatic drawing rooms. He was rather above the average in height, and very fine looking, with long black hair, a clear high forchead, large deep eyes, a thick black beard, and a very fascinating smile. His voice was melodious, and his hands and feet betrayed his perfectly aristoeratic origin. He had a mild, modest rather melancholy bearing. He wore a loose dress of pointing a pistol at his head, demanded why he had left her for "that hussy." Fuller tried to grasp the pistol from the hand of the furious woman, but she threw him down, and, placing the pistol at his head, demanded that he confess that she was his wife. "Yes, darring, of course you are, but don't shoot, for God's sake," he cried. Several persons arrived at this moment, and Mr. Fuller prayed for God's sake that she be disarmed. This was done. She then wanted the man arrested, saying that he was her husband, and had deserted her. The woman who was in Fuller's company fled into a house near by and hid herself in a pantry.

Another account says that the boat landing at the foot of Lake street was crowled with gentlemen and ladies, quite a number of whom wore sitting in the had a fall that and 8t to pid. Unios Central.

"Yes Darling, of Course you are my Wife, but Bond't Shoot for God's Sake."

Cooperstown, N. Y., Aug. 24.—C. R. Fuller, registered at the Ballard House from New York, has been here several days with a woman named Mrs. Clark, said to be a New York merchant's wife. This morning, while Fuller and Mrs. Clark were sitting on the shore of the lake, a woman heavily veiled jumped upon Fuller and, pointing a pistol at his head, demanded why he had left her for "that hussy." Fuller tried to grasp the pistol from the hand of the furious women had its effect upon the general list, which was bid up also, but toward the close the demand ceased and the few offerings brought prices '4 to 'A '8 cent off from the first figures of the day.
